Her husband seemed greatly alarmed and asked her what the matter was. She looked over the crowd in the car like a frightened fawn. It was a full minute before she could speak. Then she whispered in her husband's ear loud enough for the intensely interested spectators to hear, "I have been touched; some one has stolen my watch!" Her eyes began to grow dim, and before the policeman could answer a big tear rolled down her cheek and

He worked rapidly toward the last and perspired a good deal. His wife looked on in open mouthed astonishment. So did the other people in the car. All had smiled and looked out the windows of the car when the woman first discovered that her watch was gone, but when her husband failed to produce it, after having told her that he had taken it, the people sat upright and watched the hunt for the missing timepiece with great interest.

Finally a quiet appearing young man, who sat in the rear of the car, arose and handed the watch to the policeman's wife. "I just wanted to teach your husband a lesson," he said.

And the crowd of passengers gave vent to a prolonged hearty laugh, and the po-liceman and his wife finally joined in the merriment, though they were a little slow to appreciate the joke. - Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Smoker's Request.

The following story of a German Diogenes is perfectly authentic. When King Frederick William IV visited the Rhine provinces, in the year 1843, he made a short stay at Wesel, where he called at the house of the oldest man in his kingdom, aged 106 years. He found him comfortably seated in an old armchair, smoking a pipe—his inseparable companion. On the king's arrival, he rose to his feet and stepped forward a few paces, but his majesty made him sit down again, and talked to him with the greatest freedom, the old man puffing away at his pipe all the time. When about to leave, the king asked him if he had any wish that it was in his power to gratify. "No, thanks, your majesty, I $5.0
